MACQUARIE UNIVERSITY	Genomics provides significant opportunities to give children a healthier start to life. Severe Intellectual Disability (ID) is among the most important unmet challenges in health care due to its prevalence, life-long nature, and frequent recurrence within families. Families with a child with ID face many social and economic impacts, including: financial pressure, relationship strain, poorer parental health and uncertainty about family planning. We will quantify the social and financial costs to families of severe intellectual disability that is genetic in origin. We will then determine the extent to which clinical genomics with cascade testing can contribute to ameliorating these impacts.	GHFMESLI000002	30/06/2020	30/06/2022	N	N	$486,897.00

Menzies School of Health Research	The burden of morbidity and mortality due to chronic diseases is particularly heavy in the NT. Multimorbidity is common with approximately 60% of Territorians over the age of 50 years living with at least two chronic conditions (1). The large land mass with a relatively sparse and dispersed population poses challenges for effective delivery of chronic disease care. This program forms part of the $20 billion Medical Research Future Fund (MRFF).	PHRD1000027	30/06/2021	29/06/2024	N	N	$2,158,403.50

Monash University	The SuperbugAi Flagship will integrate pathogen genomic data and electronic health care data to address the problem of antimicrobial resistance (AMR) in the healthcare system. The research program will involve testing, clinical validation and implementation of a decision support system for precision medicine and AMR treatment and the creation of an AMR tracking and response system. This research will lead to earlier detection of AMR, personalised treatments for improved patient survival, and prevention of AMR outbreaks in the healthcare system. MONASH UNIVERSITY	The use of genetic test results in insurance raises ethical, legal & social concerns. Without adequate regulation, it could act as a barrier to genomic medicine in Australia. Recently, the Financial Services Council (FSC), peak body for life insurers, announced a moratorium on the requirement to disclose genetic results, for policies up to certain limits. The moratorium comes into effect July 2019. There will be a critical need to monitor its impact, including how it is received by stakeholders; effects on the uptake of genetic testing & research participation; & impacts on genetic discrimination. Our project will achieve these goals, to inform a planned 2022 regulatory review, & help Australia achieve appropriate long-term regulation.	GHFMESLI000004	30/06/2020	30/06/2022	N	N	$500,000.00
MONASH UNIVERSITY	This project aims to increase public trust in genomic technologies used to diagnose and prevent mitochondrial disease by developing a best practice framework for their use and implementation in Australia. It will provide a comprehensive analysis of the ethical, legal and social issues that arise in this domain, foster understanding of mitochondrial disease and genomics in the medical and wider Australian community, and present a comprehensive view of current practice in reproductive genomics for mitochondrial disease. The best practice framework it develops will guide clinical practice and shape policy and regulation of the provision of reproductive genomics for mitochondrial disease. MURDOCH CHILDREN'S RESEARCH INSTITUTE	This project will generate new knowledge about the ethical, legal and social implications of rapid genomic sequencing (RGS) in critically ill children. It will use both qualitative and quantitative research methods to improve understanding of the impact of RGS on patients, families, clinicians and health systems. It will apply ethical and legal principles to analyse key issues raised by RGS and develop evidence-based advice and guidelines to improve policy and practice. It will also establish a Centre for Ethics of Paediatric Genomics which will bring together national and international thought leaders in the field across ethical, legal, economical and clinical dimensions to further research and policy in the field of genomic medicine. MURDOCH CHILDREN'S RESEARCH INSTITUTE	We will transform the care of critically ill children with genetic conditions in Australia by delivering a national program for rapid genomic diagnosis. We will evaluate whole genome sequencing (WGS) as a first-tier rapid test in the diagnostic setting, while scaling up rapid diagnosis across multiple centres in Australia, building research, clinical and diagnostic laboratory expertise and translational capability. This collaborative translational study will leverage substantial co-investment to maximize program outcomes. Comprehensive interdisciplinary evaluation of the program will produce a world-leading body of work, which will inform policy and practice in rapid paediatric genomics in Australia and other healthcare systems. NATIONAL HEART FOUNDATION OF AUSTRALIA	The goal of the Heart Foundation is to fund research that reduces the risk and impact of heart disease and improves outcomes for people living with heart disease. To achieve this, the strategic grants are focused on knowledge and treatment gaps. The objective of this project is to fund innovate research that addresses gaps and improves heart health outcomes in four strategic areas of Cardio-oncology, Predictive Modelling, Secondary Prevention and Women and Heart disease. The four topics were based on extensive public consultation with consumers, Australians living with heart disease, researchers, clinicians and numerous other stakeholders involved in heart health. NATIONAL STROKE FOUNDATION	Each year up to 600 Australian children suffer a stroke; 1 in 20 die and more than half of survivors experience long-term impairments. Time-critical reperfusion therapies to salvage brain are key to improving outcomes but there is a huge gap between adults and children in accessing these treatments. Stroke Foundation will partner with researchers, health professionals and patients to transform the care of children with stroke by decreasing time to diagnosis and increasing the number of children receiving reperfusion therapies. This will be achieved through the development and implementation of a world-first national Paediatric Acute Code Stroke (PACS) protocol, using innovative decision support tools and advanced imaging technologies. QUEENSLAND UNIVERSITY OF TECHNOLOGY	This multidisciplinary project will produce actionable intelligence to help health services implement efficient models of care that empower children who receive open heart surgery and their families to access the right assessments and treatments in the right location for their circumstances at the right time for optimal prevention and treatment of neurodevelopmental complications according to contemporary clinical recommendations and child/family circumstances (CHD LIFE+). This will be achieved through mixed methods research incl. complex health service model simulations, implementation science, and co-design processes. This project includes leading academics, clinicians and all Australian services who perform paediatric open heart surgery.	ARGCHDG000035	30/06/2020	30/06/2024	N	N	$2,997,256.00
QUEENSLAND UNIVERSITY OF TECHNOLOGY	Aboriginal Australians are dying much younger than other Australians, in part due to an apparent genetic pre-disposition to chronic diseases. Better understanding of this genetic contribution has the potential to improve early detection and target prevention strategies. This project will use whole genome sequencing (WGS) to define the genetic architecture of the Tiwi people and its association to serious chronic diseases, helping to develop a precision medicine approach that will enable accurate diagnosis and inform targeted treatments. It will also train and build research and clinical capacity among collaborating partners and affected communities, creating international visibility in clinical genomics. SWINBURNE UNIVERSITY OF TECHNOLOGY	The success of the GHFM rests on the ability to reduce tension between public trust and industry involvement. Via empirical public research we will provide the GHFM with the evidence needed to tackle this tension. We will uncover reasons for concern by identifying publics with distinct views on different aspects of commercialisation, thereby enabling tailored engagement and communication strategies. Doctrinal and policy research in existing governance arrangements will also enable the GHFM to analyse their capacity to respond to reasons for distrust identified through the empirical research. Contextualising the outputs within national and international obligations will provide an evidence base for targeted recommendations to promote trust. THE UNIVERSITY OF ADELAIDE	We shall identify non-genomic factors across gestation that are associated with congenital heart disease (CHD). Using government and other data, we have assembled a cohort comprising all births in South Australia (1986-2015, n=580,000) linked to birth defects reported to age 5 years. Prescription medicines have been added to maternal exposures that are routinely registered. We will identify contributions to CHD from 1) specific maternal health problems and pregnancy complications 2) selected prescription medicines 3) medical interventions to treat infertility. We will assess special needs and educational performance in children with CHDs across their school years. This work will be replicated in a comparable Canadian cohort. THE UNIVERSITY OF QUEENSLAND	We will identify gene expression patterns predicting patient-centred short- and long-term outcomes in infants undergoing heart surgery. The study is an expansion of our existing large trial of infants under 2 years of age undergoing open heart surgery on cardiopulmonary bypass across all paediatric heart surgery centres in Australia and New Zealand. Using cutting-edge gene expression studies, we will investigate the individual response to cardiopulmonary bypass. A state-of-the-art neuropsychological assessment is performed in all children until school entry age. The aim is to understand and predict the adverse impact of heart surgery on infants with heart disease to improve long term outcomes for children with childhood heart disease. THE UNIVERSITY OF QUEENSLAND	Scientific and medical developments in genomics are rapidly advancing with potentially profound impacts on people and society. For people with disability, the impacts of those developments can fundamentally alter their view of themselves and their perceived value in society. When scientific advances have existential impacts, affected individuals need to be involved in decisions about the direction of genomics and the medical, ethical and psychosocial implications. Through collaboration and co-design, this project seeks to articulate the ethical, legal and social issues of genomics and disability and the processes for effective bi-directional communication and engagement between multiple stakeholders including the disability community. THE UNIVERSITY OF QUEENSLAND	Sepsis is a leading cause of death and disability in adults and children, accounting for ca. 5000 deaths in Australia every year, and $846M costs. This study aims to improve the diagnosis of sepsis through host transcriptomics. We will build on a unique prospective cohort of critically ill children presenting acutely with suspected sepsis to metropolitan, regional, and remote hospitals in Australia. We will discover host gene expression signatures characterizing dysregulated host response to bacterial infection and test these in a validation cohort. This project addresses a key priority in health and can lead to better treatment of sepsis, reduce unnecessary use of antibiotics, improve patient outcomes, with major cost saving potential. University of Melbourne	Clinical metagenomic next-generation sequencing (mNGS) is a transformative approach in microbial diagnostics and patient care, because it can be used to detect and characterise all known pathogens - bacterial, viral, fungal, parasitic - in one single test. The ability to detect all known infections within a matter of hours is a paradigm shift in infectious diseases, and will ensure that clinical care is rapidly targeted where, when and how it is needed. The META-GP program will develop and implement clinical metagenomic diagnostics for infectious diseases in Australia. By the end of this programme, Australia will have the first accredited, nationally-accessible network of laboratories that can apply metagenomic approaches in patient care. University of Melbourne	The PPHAGE multidisciplinary team will deliver a large scale integrated public health pathogen genomics research program, to demonstrate utility, cost-effectiveness, and capacity for translation of genomics into public health nationally. The program will deploy a national genomic platform (AusTrakka), for consistent analysis and reporting, and working with health departments and public health laboratories, will implement national genomics based responses to major infectious disease, focussing on respiratory and vaccine preventable diseases, foodborne diseases, sexually transmitted infections and antimicrobial resistance. Evaluation programs will determine cost-effectiveness and public health utility of PPHAGE.	FSPGN000049	2/01/2021	30/06/2024	N	N	$9,999,499.00
UNIVERSITY OF MELBOURNE	Mutations in the sodium channel gene SCN2A cause a devastating epilepsy called early infantile SCN2A developmental and epileptic encephalopathy (DEE). Children under 3 months of age have uncontrolled seizures, profound impairment and a high risk of early death. We propose a first-in-man gene therapy trial using a novel SCN2A antisense oligonucleotide to reverse this severe disease, replicating our findings in mice. Our physiological studies will ensure patients whose sodium channels are overexcitable are selected for the trial. We will develop critical clinical and molecular biomarkers of disease as a baseline on which to assess trial outcomes. Then we will perform safety and dosing studies of our gene therapy in children with SCN2A-DEE.	GHFMCDI000002	30/06/2020	30/06/2022	N	N	$4,079,947.00
UNIVERSITY OF MELBOURNE	Defined by the absence of a cancer type diagnosis, cancer of unknown primary is a devastating disease with an exceptionally poor survival outcome. We will test two genomic approaches that will guide CUP treatment and help resolve missing cancer type diagnosis. We will use complete genome sequencing to capture all DNA changes in a patient's tumour cells to direct a more precise treatment. We will also test a new innovative approach that analyses DNA released from tumour cells into the patient's blood that will accelerate the return of genomic test results. Finally, we will assess whether analysis of tumour cells can guide better use of a new cancer imaging method. This study will drive broader adoption of genomics for all CUP patients	GHFMCDI000003	30/06/2020	30/06/2022	N	N	$4,993,323.00
UNIVERSITY OF MELBOURNE	The aims of the project are to increase and ensure the benefits of genomics for Indigenous Australians by improving support for equity at both a health service and health system level. The project will achieve this by: 1. Co-designing and implementing measures to improve the extent to which provision of genomic health services meet the needs of Indigenous Australians. 2. Evaluating the impact of the measures on the accessibility, availability, affordability and acceptability of care. 3. Conducting a policy analysis to identify actions at a health systems level that will ensure the provision of genomic health services will continue to meet the needs of Indigenous Australians, as the field continues to develop. University of New South Wales	Dramatic strides have been made in treatment and prevention of HIV and hepatitis C virus (HCV) infections. The current challenge is elimination of these pathogens as public health risks by widespread implementation of improved prevention strategies, and highly effective antiviral drug treatments. This project will establish national networks, governance and infrastructure for improved public health metadata collection, sharing of existing viral sequence datasets, and deployment of high throughput viral sequencing and bioinformatic systems for 'near real time' molecular epidemiological analyses. H2Seq will deliver actionable data to guide national and regional public health interventions. with cost-saving outcomes.	FSPGN000047	2/01/2021	30/06/2024	N	N	$6,629,162.00

UNIVERSITY OF NEW SOUTH WALES	The prospective national project (PreGen) assesses utility of prenatal genomic testing to diagnose early and improve neonatal intensive care (NICU) management. It is a significant opportunity to create rapid diagnostic teams, understand better genetic disease in babies and how they relate to ultrasound phenotypes. Health economic benefits of genomic results before transfer of babies to NICU will be assessed. Outcomes are a) development of Australian prenatal rapid genomic testing care standards and national laboratory accreditation b) health economic utility of early genomics c) understanding human malformation biology and d) creating industry/academic partnerships to gain knowledge of childhood diseases, their causes and treatments. UNIVERSITY OF SOUTH AUSTRALIA	The primary aim of this study is to determine what proportion of cases of stillbirth and perinatal death (PD) can be diagnosed by genomic analyses, such as whole exome sequencing (WES), whole genome sequencing (WGS), RNAseq, and/or SNP microarrays. The Australian definition of PD comprises fetal and newborn abnormalities that result in termination of pregnancy, death due to congenital abnormalities, death in utero, or death in the newborn period. Accurate diagnosis of the cause of PD is essential for appropriate counselling, including risk to future pregnancies in families. This study will inform public health policy recommendations for public health funding, including MBS, which will have significantly broader socioeconomic implications. UNIVERSITY OF SYDNEY	We address the unmet need for a durable, biocompatible right ventricle to pulmonary artery valved tube, used in reconstructive surgery for congenital heart disease. Currently available animal and donated human products fail in just a few years, requiring replacement open heart surgery every 5-10 years. This has patient safety, psychological and financial implications for the individual, family and health system. Our team of doctors, scientists and engineers is bringing together recent developments in polymer science and computational engineering to build a solution tailored to the individual that will allow the tube to 'grow' with the child, maintain good valve function, avoiding reoperation, improving heart function and quality of life. UNIVERSITY OF SYDNEY	Most Australians who have congenital heart disease (CHD) survive to adulthood but often live with complex medical problems and reduced exercise capacity. Although regular exercise is well-recognised to be of benefit for physical and mental health in many health conditions, research investigating the health impact of exercise and the best way to help adults and children living with CHD to lead active lives is lacking. This project will address that gap with a 12 month exercise training and lifestyle education program designed to improve exercise capacity and quality of life in children and adults living with CHD. This will be largest and most definitive exercise trial ever performed in this population which will inform practice worldwide.	ARGCHDG000016	30/06/2020	29/06/2024	N	N	$3,328,569.00
UNIVERSITY OF SYDNEY	This national multi-disciplinary project addresses the critical need to improve health outcomes across the Congenital Heart Disease (CHD) life-course. The research program proposes a "two level" approach to generating important and clinically relevant research outcomes; (i) through generating data from 25,000 child and adult cases of CHD from sites across Australia, with linkage to survival and health care utilisation (a National CHD Registry) and (ii) applying comprehensive phenotyping to 2,400 paediatric/adult cases living with CHD that provides the information required to target critical psychological, mental health, neurocognitive and quality of life outcomes in CHD patients and the parents of CHD children. UNIVERSITY OF TASMANIA	This project builds on the best available science concerning the development and application of genomic technologies focussing on human health, applying the best available social science in order to promote meaningful public understanding and informed public debate. We begin by capturing current understandings among the public concerning genome editing, which given the novelty of the issue are not necessarily well-formed. Selected lay citizens will then engage with the science under good deliberative conditions, with the intention of developing a knowledgeable and reflective assessment of the issue. This assessment should then feed into and help create a broader citizen-centric public debate that informs future government policy.	GHFMESLI000001	29/06/2020	29/06/2022	N	N	$460,631.00
UNIVERSITY OF TASMANIA	Genomic sequencing for clinical and research purposes is now increasingly commonplace. There are considerable legal uncertainties around the rights of patients and research participants to access their raw genomic data, including ownership and privacy issues, tort liability and inter-jurisdictional complexities. This project will empirically assess requests for raw genomic data requests and subsequent use. This evidence will facilitate an applied approach to legal and ethical analysis, the results of which will be of significant benefit to patients, clinicians and researchers. Guidance will be provided through development of protocols for research and clinical practice and recommendations directed to policy makers.	GHFMESLI000008	30/06/2020	30/06/2022	N	N	$388,026.00
